Money for All.

In times of tight money local bank ers make a practice of caring for their customers as best they can, but always, in part at least. In times of plenitude customers entitled to credit accommodations are cared for to credit accommodations are cared for to the extent of their demands. There is always a demand for accommodations from a large class of would-be borrowers not entitled to much accommodation. Just at this time the legitimate demand is at a low point. This has been demonstrated by the willingness shown by two or three, perhaps more, bankers to make commercial loans outside of their regular clientele. Whether a customer or not, any one with the right kind of collateral can obtain money, on demand loans, in this city, at 5 per cent.
